What does cag stand for in medical terms. Cag+full+form. What does cag stand for.

Background and purpose: Coronary angiography (CAG) and percutaneous transluminal coronary angioplasty (PTCA) are important procedures for the diagnosis and treatment of patients with coronary disease. However, the long-term trends in the frequency of use of CAG and PTCA and their relationship with sex have not been clearly determined in the Asian population. The purpose of this study was to examine gender differences in patterns of use of CAG and PTCA in a University Hospital in Taiwan in the 1983-1996 period. Methods: We have studied the monthly data of all patients undergoing CAG or PTCA in a Taipei university hospital from 1983 to 1996. A time series analysis was used to estimate gender differences in the use patterns of CAG and PTCA. Results: The frequency of CAG and PTCA has increased significantly during this period. Before the 1990s, only a small number of patients were treated with PTSD. However, this number has steadily increased since the 1990s. Men were more likely to submit to CAG and PTCA than women. A time series analysis with mounted models was used to create an integrated mobile media model. For the CAG, the estimated interchange value for men was 2.5 times higher than for women. In the PTCA series, the value of the interchange in men was 4.4 times higher than that of women. Trend change patterns have shown higher increases in men than women, and higher increases in the PTCA than in the CAG series. Through the modelling of the transfer function and the analysis of intervention, we found that the effect of CAG on the incidence of PTCA in men was 1.8 times higher than that of women. The estimated influence of the use of a new catheterisation chamber (added in 1993) was 2.8 times greater in men than in women. The adapted model showed good correlation with values observed in the following 12 months for both sexes. Conclusions: We concluded that women had fewer CAG and PTCA procedures than men and that the influence of CAG on the PTCA series was significantly greater Men Women. Huntingtin (Htt) is the protein coded for by the HTT gene, also known as the IT15 ("interesting transcript 15") gene.
